It required the war to awaken the muse of Lincoln J. Carter, veteran of many melodramps of the past. Last night he essayed at the Casino to drown the melodies of Jerry Kern, the scintillations of Bolton, Wodehouse, &c., in the rattle and roar of war. It took four acts and twelve scenes to allow Mr. Carter, limited during recent seasons to occasional effects at the Winter Garden to spread his well known wings again And inevitably he could not be confined to Manhattan Island nor to this country After an act which revealed such fa miller regions as Fifth avenue and New York church, there came with the dear old inn that has airead; become a tradition of war plays, and what is still more important, the daugh drama that had its inspiration in the

There was none of his old sympathies about him once the acwas in action abroad. He was seen it an aerial battle, he went over the to: and he figured in a gas attack. So he was cleaned of all the idealism which had made him an object of earlier sus-

The programme said that Mr. Carter not only built the play but the "produc-tion." That is a great distinction in these days when there is little enough building even of a play itself. But much more distinguished was the amount of noise that the new play created. The first act was quiet and long enough to make any interruption welcome. There was plenty of racket from that point on.

The German bombs fell with a deafening report on the Belgian inn, the guns on the fighting planes reared and the assault from the first line treach was suc Edward Welse, planist, gave a recital a racket as the ears of a throndwarst evening in Acolton Hall. He is audience have seldom heard. The Casir, actors, who seemed to the spectators perfectly wonderful that they excaped being blown to pieces. It must have been a difficult task. With all its noise on one side of the footlights, the fate of "An American Ace" might have been in doubt. But the enthusiastic clamor of the audience showed the new play had made a potent appeal to the pub-lic. Thus may patriotism blend the tastes of Third avenue and Broadway. Mrs. Nina Larre Duryes, who is here on a mission from France, had one of the stage boxes, and in her party were Mrs. Edward La Montagne, Mrs. James W. Benjamin, Hugh R. Griffin of Paris,

George Stewart Smith, William S. Lower Preston Gibson, Alan Hawley, and also officers from Governors Island and the Brooklyn navy yard.
